Speak Easy — Russian (Русский) review sheet

Spoken Canadian English for adult learners · 79 translated lines · 26 tips for Russian speakers

Thank you for helping! Speak Easy is a free course for adult newcomers. Learners who choose Russian see a one-line summary of each lesson in Russian, plus tips about common difficulties for Russian speakers.

Please check: (1) Is each translation correct and natural for adult learners? Simple words are best. (2) Are the tips in Part 2 and Part 3 accurate for Russian speakers?
Tick OK or Fix, and write any correction in the last column. The English column is the lesson's English introduction, for context — the translation is a short summary, not a word-for-word translation.

Part 2 — Language page (“Tips for Russian speakers”)

Text	Check	Correction / comment
Главное, на что стоит обратить внимание русскоговорящим при изучении разговорного английского.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
Sounds to practise TH, W (not в), H (not x), English R /ɪ/ vs /i:/ (ship/sheep), /æ/ vs /e/ (bad/bed) Final voiced consonants: bag ≠ back The puff of air in /p t k/ Intonation Yes/no questions rise at the end — not a rise-fall on the key word. Neutral Russian melody is flatter; use more voice movement to sound friendly. Grammar and words Articles a / an / the Present perfect for duration: I’ve lived here for two years Translation traps: take a photo, ask a question, on the internet	☐ OK ☐ Fix

Part 3 — Tips inside lessons (written in simple English)

#	Lesson	Tip	Check	Correction / comment
1	How to Practise	In Russian schools, students often learn English by reading and translating. That builds good grammar and vocabulary — you already have that. What is usually missing is listening to real speech and speaking out loud a lot . Focus your time there.	☐ OK ☐ Fix

2	Consonant Sounds	English /p t k/ need a puff of air — Russian п, т, к have none, so pin can sound like bin . /ŋ/ (sing) is new: don’t add a g or k at the end. And don’t make final consonants voiceless — see Final Consonants .	☐ OK ☐ Fix
3	TH: think and this	Russian speakers often replace TH with s / z (“I sink so” for I think so), or with t / d (“tree” for three), or f / v . Each one can change the meaning. Look in a mirror: if you cannot see your tongue, it is not TH.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
4	W vs V	Russian has no W. Round your lips like a short y and keep your teeth away from your lip: w = “y-э”, not в . Words with wh (what, where, when) start with W too.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
5	English H and R	Russian x scrapes in the back of the mouth. If you use it, “hello” sounds harsh: “khello.” Practise by sighing: “haaa.” Then say “ha-llo” with that same soft breath.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
6	The Canadian T	The flap T is almost the same as the Russian p tapped once, very quickly! Say вода fast, then try “wa- t er” with a single quick tap. But do not roll it.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
7	Final Consonants: bag / back	In Russian, voiced consonants at the end of a word become voiceless (дуб → [дуп]). In English they don’t: bag ≠ back , eyes ≠ ice . Make the vowel longer before a voiced consonant.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
8	Short and Long Vowels: ship / sheep	Russian и sits between these two English sounds. If you use и for both, “live” and “leave” sound the same. Make the short /ɪ/ more relaxed and lower — think of the vowel in Russian был or мыло , but with the tongue a bit more forward.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
9	cat / cut / bet	Russian speakers often say /æ/ as э , so bad sounds like bed , and man sounds like men . Open your jaw more for /æ/ — imagine you are about to bite a big apple.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
10	Word Stress	Russian also has free word stress, and it changes meaning: му́ка (torment) vs мука́ (flour), за́мок vs замо́к . You already know the feeling. The difficulty is that you must learn the stress of each English word, just like in Russian.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
11	The Schwa /ə/	In Russian, unstressed o is not pronounced as “o”: молоко sounds like [mə-la-KO], and хорошо like [khə-ra-SHO]. English does the same thing, just more often. Do not pronounce every vowel the way it is spelled.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
12	Sentence Stress: Content vs Function Words	Russian speakers often give every word the same weight: “I — WANT — TO — GO — TO — THE — STORE.” It sounds very careful and slow. Practise making the small words almost disappear.	☐ OK ☐ Fix

13	Rhythm: English Keeps the Beat	Russian rhythm also reduces unstressed syllables, but English does it more strongly and more regularly. A common result is speech that sounds “staccato” — each word separate. Practise with a beat: clap, tap your foot, or use music.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
14	Focus Stress: Changing the Meaning	Russian often shows focus by changing word order . English mostly keeps the word order and uses voice stress instead. If you do not use focus stress, people may miss your point — or think you are not interested.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
15	Linking Words Together	Russian speakers often put a small stop (a glottal catch) before words that start with a vowel: “pick | it | up.” This makes speech sound choppy. Try to slide the last consonant into the next word. Practise slowly first: “pi... ki... tup.”	☐ OK ☐ Fix
16	Falling Intonation ↘	Wh-questions are easy: Russian Где ты живёшь? also falls. The challenge is that English falls are often bigger — the voice starts higher before it drops. A small, flat fall can sound bored or tired to English listeners.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
17	Rising Intonation ↗	A Russian yes/no question has a sharp rise-and-fall on the key word : Ты лю́бишь хоккей? If you use that pattern in English, it can sound surprised, suspicious or annoyed — “ DO you like hockey?!” In English, keep the voice going up at the end and stay up.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
18	Sounding Polite and Friendly	Neutral Russian intonation is flatter than English. Russians are sometimes described as “serious” or “cold” by Canadians — not because of what they say, but because of how the voice moves . This is not about personality; it is just a different melody. Try to use a bigger, warmer voice movement than feels natural at first.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
19	Articles: a, an, the — or nothing	Ask: could I say “какой-то / один” in Russian? → use a . Could I say “этот / тот самый”? → use the . Am I talking about everything of this kind? → no article.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
20	Present: Simple vs Continuous	Watch the -s with he/she/it: She work s . And state verbs (know, like, want) are not used with -ing.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
21	Present Perfect vs Past Simple	In Russian: Я живу здесь два месяца — present tense. In English this becomes present perfect : I live here two months. I am living here for two months. I’ve lived here for two months. / I’ve been living here for two months.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
22	Talking About the Future	Russian Я буду… is often translated as will every time. But for plans, Canadians almost always say gonna : “What are you gonna do this weekend?” — “I’m gonna sleep!” Using will for every future sounds formal.	☐ OK ☐ Fix

23	Words That Go Together	Common translation traps: “make a photo” (делать фото) → take a photo ; “give a question” (задать вопрос) → ask a question ; “do sport” → play sports / work out ; “in the internet” → on the internet ; “I have 30 years” → I’m 30 ; “visit a lesson” → go to class .	☐ OK ☐ Fix
24	Small Talk & Greetings	In Russia, “Как дела?” is often a real question, and people may answer honestly with details. In Canada, a long answer about problems to a cashier or a classmate you just met will surprise them. Save real answers for friends and family.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
25	Keeping the Conversation Going	Many Russian speakers fill silences with э-э-э or ну… . English listeners notice this immediately. Train yourself to say um , so and well instead.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
26	Opinions, Agreeing & Disagreeing	Russian communication is often more direct, and that is a sign of honesty. In Canada, the same directness can sound rude or angry — even when you don’t mean it that way. Adding a softener (“I think,” “maybe,” “kind of,” “I’m not sure”) costs nothing and helps a lot.	☐ OK ☐ Fix
